Commissioners vote for better internet across Adams County

BRIGHTON — Google Fiber will bring faster speeds and better service to Adams County internet users, as the Adams County Board of Commissioners approved an agreement May 14 with the company that allows the installation, maintenance and operation of a fiber-optic broadband network in the public right-of-way.

The agreement will increase broadband access and speeds and ensure currently underserved neighborhoods have equitable access to the internet.

“Staying ahead with new tech is key for our area’s growth. We are all about attracting people and businesses, making sure they’ve got what they need to thrive, which includes reliable internet access” said Commissioner Emma Pinter, board chair. “Plus, even non-customers stand to benefit. We’ve seen in other markets that once Google enters the picture, other companies step up their game!”

Google Fiber plans to begin construction on its network in early 2025. The work will include narrow trench excavation, which should help minimize the impact of construction across the county and other right-of-way property.

“Fast, reliable internet is a necessity and should be available to everyone in today’s world,” said County Manager Noel Bernal.

Google Fiber currently has right-of-way agreements with numerous cities in the Denver area, including Westminster, Wheat Ridge and Lakewood.
